The Poetry of Gems.

In olden times the diamond was believed to protect its possessor from enchantments of all kinds, from poison and plagues. The ancients engraved the figure of Mars upon it, believing that victory would come to the wearer of such a diamond, no matter how great the number of his adversaries. To lose a diamond was a piece of ill luck from which was augured the approach of some dire misfortune. The largest diamond which is known belongs to the Rajah of Mattan, in the East Indies. This diamond has been in the same royal family for a century and a half, and although large sums have been offered for it, and bloody wars have been fought to gain possession of it, the jewel still graces the Indian crown—as the Rajah believes that parting with so costly a gem would insure destruction to himself and dynasty. This diamond is celebrated for the marvelous cures it performs, when sufferers bathe in the water in which it has been steeped.

One of the rarest and most valuable of gems is the Oriental ruby. A perfect ruby exceeding one carat is said to be higher prized than the diamond. A ruby which once belonged to Rudolph II. was valued at a sum not less than £30,000, and in size resembled a small hen's egg. Peter the Great, of Russia, when he was visiting England, presented as a farewell gift to King William a splendid ruby, worth £10,000, which, in accordance with his well-known eccentricity of character, he took from his pocket, wrapped in a bit of common brown paper! A famous ruby which once belonged to Edward, the Black Prince, is now prominent in the royal crown of England. This ruby is pierced through the centre—after the Eastern manner. It was worn in the battle of Agincourt, 1415, by Henry the Fifth. The King of the Island of Ceylon—famous for its wealth in jewel mines—was said to have possessed the largest ruby ever seen—being a span in length and as thick as a man's arm. It has, says Marco Polo, the appearance of a glowing fire and is so valuable that no estimate can be made of its worth in money. The Grand Khan Kublai sent ambassadors to his monarch with a request that he would yield to him possession of this gem, in return for which he should receive the value of a city, the answer given was to this effect: That he could not sell it for all the treasures of the universe, nor could he, on any terms, suffer it to go out of his dominions, as it had been handed down to him by his predecessors on the throne. The early Chinese travelers relate that in the seventh century a ruby was elevated on the spire in Ceylon, the light of which illuminated the skies. A Chinese Emperor wore in his cap a carbuncle of such unusual brilliancy that at the great levees at night, its red lustre so filled the palace that it was called the "Red Palace Illuminator." An old Chinese work says that the origin of trade in the island of Ceylon was coeval with the visit of the Indian god, Buddha, who sprinkled the land with sweet dew, which caused it to produce red gems—and thus gave the people an article of merchandise. Among the superstitions connected with the ruby is that it confers the power of seeing in the dark, if it is worn on the neck. It also warned its wearer, by change of color, of coming misfortune, and cured diseases of the eye if tied over the forehead in a linen cloth.

Next to the diamond and ruby, the opal is the most valuable gem. The Empress Josephine possessed the finest opal of modern times, which was called "The Burning of Troy," on account of its brilliancy, which resembled the fitful light of flames. An ancient writer mentions an opal of the size of a hazel nut, which was wrought with marvelous skill and grasped in the claws of a golden eagle. It contained all the various tints of the sky, and shone with such splendor that it struck terror into the hearts of beholders. The opal was highly esteemed by the ancients, but modern romance has flung around it a baleful influence, and it is said to bring ill luck to its wearer.

The beautiful sapphire, with its soft, velvety blue color, was esteemed as being a great enemy to "black choler, and to free the mind and mend the manners." It was sometimes powdered and mixed with milk as a cure for boils, which was surely a rather expensive medicine.

It was believed that if the name of the sun or the moon was engraved upon the amethyst or jewel hung around the neck upon the hair of a baboon, or the feather of a swallow, it was an infallible protection against witchcraft, and also protected its wearer from the flight of locusts and of hailstones. The amethyst is called the "bishop's stone" because rings set with these gems are worn by the Roman Catholic bishops.

The turquoise not only strengthens the eyes and enlivens the heart of its possessor, but it is said also to take upon itself the consequences of a serious fall, and breaking itself to save its wearer from fracturing a bone. It was also supposed to loose its color if the person grew ill and to be entirely blanched if he died—

"As a compassionate turquoise that doth tell,
By looking pale, the wearer is not well."

One of the most beautiful and popular of gems is the emerald. This pearl is said to have been found in olden times so large that the Romans used emeralds for their mirrors, and Nero is said to have worn an emerald eye-glass when viewing the combat of the gladiators. The early inhabitants of Peru worshipped as their goddess an emerald as large as an ostrich's egg. The priests, who had the charge of this divinity, gave out that no gifts were so precious to the goddess as "her daughters," the emeralds, and therefore great quantities of these jewels were brought to her shrine. Those who engraved upon gems were accustomed to gaze for a time upon an emerald to refresh their wearied eyes. This stone was also considered a preventive of epilepsy and other diseases. It was held in such esteem by the Romans that Pliny tells us that when the famous Lucullus landed at Alexandria, Ptolemy, who wished to attach him forever to his interests, could think of no more precious gift with which to win his regard than a beautiful emerald set in gold and with his portrait engraved upon it.—Sophie Spencer in Evening Mail.

Shrugging the Shoulders.

We may now inquire why men in all parts of the world when they feel—whether or not they wish to show this feeling—that they cannot or will not do something, or will not resist something if done by another, shrug their shoulders, at the same time often bending in their elbows, showing the palms of their hands with extended fingers, often throwing their heads a little on one side, raising their eyebrows, and opening their mouths. These states of the mind are either simply passive, or show a determination not to act. None of the above movements are of the least service. The explanation lies, I cannot doubt, in the principle of unconscious antithesis. This principle here seems to come into play as clearly as in the case of a dog which, when feeling savage, puts himself in the proper attitude for attacking, and for making himself appear terrible to his enemy; but, as soon as he feels affectionate, throws his whole body into a directly opposite attitude, though this is of no direct use to him. Let it be observed how an indignant man, who resents, and will not submit to some injury, holds his head erect, squares his shoulders and expands his chest. He often clenches his fists, and puts one or both arms in the proper position for attack or defence, with the muscles of his limbs rigid. He frowns—that is, he contracts and lowers his brows—and, being determined, closes his mouth. The actions and attitude of a helpless man are, in every one of these respects, exactly the reverse. The helpless man unconsciously contracts the muscles of his forehead which are antagonistic to those that cause a frown, and thus raises his eyebrows; at the same time he relaxes the muscles about the mouth, so that the lower jaw drops. The antithesis is complete in every detail, not only in the movements of the features, but in the position of the limbs and in the attitude of the whole body. As the helpless or apologetic man often wishes to show his state of mind, he then acts in a conspicuous or demonstrative manner. In accordance with the fact that squaring the elbows and clenching the fists are by no means universal with the men of all races, when they feel indignant and are prepared to attack their enemies, so it appears that a helpless or apologetic frame of mind is expressed, in many parts of the world, by merely shrugging the shoulders, without turning in the elbows and opening the hands. The man or child who is obstinate, or one who is resigned to some great misfortune, has in neither case any idea of resistance by active means; and he expresses this state of mind by simply keeping his shoulders raised, or he may possibly fold his arms across his breast.—From the "Expression of the Emotions in Man and Animals," by Charles Darwin.

The heart of a deacon who officiated with the inevitable contribution box, at a recent meeting in this vicinity for foreign missions, was gladdened by observing among its contents a neatly-rolled package that one could easily imagine to be a "check," or something of that agreeable nature. On hastily investigating, his former belief in the depravity of human nature was changed to a certainty by discovering one dollar and a cent, and upon the paper the following: "The cent is for the heathen, and the dollar to get it to them."

LOOK TO YOUR MOUTH.

How to Have Sound Teeth.

Sound, evenly formed, and white teeth are an important feature in completing the beauty of the face. The charm of the face is entirely lost, if the motion of the mouth must be dreaded, lest it will reveal a row of discolored, decayed, or tartar-covered teeth. A countenance otherwise perfect is made hideous by a smile disclosing decay or uncleanness, where only perfect sweetness is endurable. Bad teeth are always and continually shocking; but teeth that are irregular in shape, if kept beautifully white are always attractive. A homely face is made pleasing by a fine set of teeth. They are a continual surprise that calls forth admiration. Handsome teeth are surely "a joy forever."

The soundness of the teeth depends greatly on the health of the body, and they usually indicate the tone of the physical system. An acid stomach will crumble the strongest teeth, and the frequent use of powerful medicines affects them injuriously. Draughts of air, first of warm, then of cold, as the temperature of our breath is when inhaled and exhaled in the street are fatal to the teeth; it is therefore important to acquire the habit of walking with the mouth closed. Fine teeth are often marred by biting thread. Ladies, when sewing, frequently bite off their thread and make niches in their front teeth which destroys their beauty. Cracking nuts with the teeth, or chewing hard substances, is destructive to the enamel, which is their armor of protection. Persons should be particular to chew equally on both sides of their mouth as masticating the food cleanses the teeth. It is their natural occupation and therefore a healthy exercise.

Teeth of a bluish pearly caste are the strongest and the most enduring. The clear bone-white teeth that gleam from behind their curtains like carefully draped gems of sculpture, are the kind that are the most subject to decay.

The durability of the teeth is very much influenced by the health of the gums. There are persons who never clean their teeth without causing the gums to bleed. This should be avoided by using a very soft brush and cold water. Warm water which is often grateful to sensitive teeth, softens and diseases the gums, which, in time, causes the teeth to decay on the exterior enamel close to and under them. Toothpicks of all kinds are not only injurious to the teeth, but are vulgar instruments. The custom of placing them on the table is a barbarous one, and encourages a disagreeable habit. A piece of silk floss run between the teeth, two or three times daily, will remove all particles of food and polish the edges of the teeth. This should always be done before retiring at night.

It is poor economy in money or comfort to neglect the teeth. Every person should have his teeth looked after twice a year by a good dentist. Small cavities can be filled with comparatively little pain attending the operation, and at a much less expense than when they have grown large from neglect and require a quantity of gold, and often treatment of the tooth for two or three days before the task can be successfully performed. There are few persons who take the trouble to properly cleanse their teeth important as this duty is to their preservation. A little brushing on the outside just enough to make them look well, answers the purpose with most people. The teeth should be thoroughly cleaned with a soft brush, good tooth powder, and cold water, inside and outside, every day and always before retiring at night.

The teeth of children are badly neglected in nine cases out of ten. It is astonishing that mothers are so careless in this particular when the beauty, health, and comfort of their children is so closely allied to the sound condition of their teeth. The latest theory of dentists is to fill the first teeth and preserve them as long as possible. The second set are more likely to come in straight than when the milk teeth are removed early.

Children cannot be made to clean their teeth thoroughly. They will omit the use of their tooth brushes altogether unless forced, and then they will not properly accomplish the task. Mothers should make it their special duty to clean their children's teeth; and also to take them to the dentist periodically to have their mouths inspected.

Care should be taken to select harmless tooth powders. Those prepared at the dentist's are best. The soapy highly flavored powders and liquid washes so extensively advertised are often deleterious to the teeth.

ALTHEA.

A Tale of Spanish Vengeance.

[From the London Fun.]

One morning while Don Hemstitch was dozing upon his leafy couch—not his main couch, but a branch—he was roused from his tranquil nap by the grunting of swine; or, if you like subtle distinctions, by the sound of human voices. Peering cautiously through his bed-hangings he saw below him at a little distance two of his countrymen in conversation. The fine practised frenzy of their looks, their excellently rehearsed air of apprehensive secrecy, showed him they were merely conspiring against somebody's life; and he dismissed the matter from his mind until the mention of his own name recalled his attention. One of the conspirators was urging the other to make one of a joint stock company for the Don's assassination; but the more conscientious plotter would not consent.

"The laws of Spain," said the latter, "with which we have an acquaintance mostly withheld from the attorneys, enjoin that when one man murders another, except for debt, he must make provision for the widow and orphans. I have it to you if, after the former's unprofitable business, we are in a position to assume the care and education of a large family. We have not a single asset, and our liabilities amount to four—in widows and more than thirty children of strong and increasing appetites."

"Caramba!" hissed the other through his beard; "we will slaughter the lot of them!"

At this cold-blooded proposition his mercenial companion recoiled aghast.

"Diavolo!" he shrieked. "Tempt me no further. What! immolate a whole hecatomb of guiltless women and children! Consider the funeral expense!"

There is really no moving the law-abiding soul to crime of doubtful profit. But Don Hemstitch was not at ease; he could not say how soon it might transpire that he had neither chick nor child. Should Don Symposio pass that way and communicate this information—as he was in a position to know—the moral scruple of the conscientious plotter would vanish like the baseless fabric of a beaten cur. Moreover, it is always unpleasant to be included in a conspiracy in which one is not a conspirator. Don Hemstitch resolved to sell his life at the highest market price.

Hastily descending his tree, he wrapped his cloak about him and stood for some time, having no hid a poinard. Trying the temper of this upon his thumb nail he found it much more reliable than his own. It was a true Toledo blade—keen enough to sever a hero. To nerve himself for the deadly work before him he began thinking of a lady whom he had once met—the lovely Donna Lavaca, beloved of El Toroblanco. Having thus wrought up his Castilian soul to a high pitch of jealously he felt quite irresistible and advanced toward the two ruffians with his poinard deadly intent in his flowing sleeve. His mein was hostile, his stride pressant, his nose tip-tilted—not to put to fine a point upon it—petaltic. Don Hemstitch was upon the war path with all his might. The forest trembled as he strode, the earth bent like thin ice beneath his heel. Birds, beasts, serpents and poachers fled affrighted to the right and left of his course. He came down upon the unsuspecting assassins like a mild Spanish avalanche.

"Senores!" he thundered, with a frightful scowl and a faint aroma of garlic, "patter your pater-noster as fast as you conveniently may. You have but ten minutes to exist. Has either of you a watch."

Then might you have seen a guilty dismay overspreading the faces of two sinners, like a sudden snow paling twin mountain peaks. In the presence of death, crime shuddered and went down into his boots.

At this supreme moment an American gentleman sitting by with his heel upon a rotted oaken stump, tilted back his chair, laid down his newspaper, and began operating upon a half eaten apple-pie. One glance at the title of that print—one look at that calm angular face clasped in its crescent of crisp crust—and Don Hemstitch Blodoza reeled, staggered like an exhausted spinning-top. He spread his baffled hand upon his eyes, and sank heavily to the earth!

"Saved! saved!" shrieked the penitent conspirators, springing upon their feet. The far depths of the forest whispered in consultation, and a distant hill-side echoed back the words. "Saved!" sang the rocks. "Saved!" the glad birds twittered from the leaves above. The bare that Don Hemstitch Blodoza's poinard would have severed limped awkwardly but confidently about, saying "Saved" as well as he knew how.

Explanation is needless. The American gentleman was the special correspondent of the New York Herald. It is tolerably well known that except beneath his searching eye no considerable event can occur, and his whole soul was focussed upon that apple pie.

That is how Spanish vengeance was baulked of its issue.

Spitz dogs are in fashion, and Skye terriers are not.

The People and the Republican Party.

[From the New York Commercial Advertiser.]

The "new party," to whose organization we have already alluded, is recklessly and fitfully banged about by its Liberal and Democratic progenitors and sponsors. They are all in the blindest sort of a "muddle," ignorant of the future, and thoroughly dissatisfied with the past, in which is the black record of their blunders and mistakes. On one point they are mostly agreed—the party must be "honest." But how such an organization is possible at the hands of those who father it, they do not explain. A party of "honest" purpose, framed by the men of Cincinnati and Baltimore, is an impossibility. The fountain is muddy, and the stream must be impure. "The living issues of the day" are also named as a basis for the party, and then we are treated to a vague and inconsequential enumeration of these issues, in which we find accusations of fraud; defiance of law; the inroads and exactions of monopolies; public extravagance and immorality; the use of money to influence legislation; the tariff; corrupt officials, &c., &c. There is nothing especially new or vital in all these. They are symptoms of a complaint as old as society, and they will to some extent pervade and corrupt any new organization precisely as they have the old ones. If anything is certain, it is that this old Democratic party has been abandoned by the people because of its complicity with wrong. And yet we hear from this party the hypocritical yearning after a purity it has never tolerated. The New Hampshire election revealed the fact that the vital essence had departed from the Democracy. In spite of every effort, in spite of calumny and detraction, in spite of the base use made of the Credit Mobilier investigation and the new salary bill, the people of New Hampshire stood by their old standard, and again demonstrated their want of confidence in the Democracy. With all its faults, they loved the Republican party still, and they admitted the possibility of no wrong doing which could abate their trust in it. The Democratic candidates for Congress had just voted against the Salary Bill, and claimed a special consideration for their act. The Republican candidates took the alarm, and telegraphed to Washington that if the bill passed there was no hope for them. The result showed that they were all mistaken. The people of New Hampshire distrusted these disinterested Congressmen. They were defeated, and then they solaced themselves by taking the pay, for voting against which they claimed a special virtue. With this history before them, the defeated Fusionists now cast about for a new party, with new ideas and a new name, in hope that under cover of a sham they may reach place and power. The country, with these tearful Jeremiahs, is going straight to the "demnition bow-wows," and they alone can save it. It is their daily and nightly lamentation that no hope exists in either of the old parties, and so they propose a revival of the Cincinnati game. Can they offer any stronger reasons now than they did for a change? Can they prove any greater necessity for action? Are they not just as certain of overwhelming defeat? They would do well to abandon the midsummer madness of which they have a fresh attack, and remember, as the Boston Advertiser says, "that no man changes his character by changing his coat, or becomes more sincerely patriotic by merely shifting his party relations."

A Lengthened Trance.

A special correspondent of the London Daily Telegraph has visited a girl at Turville, near Great Marlow, who, it is alleged, has been in a trance for nearly two years. He thus describes the interview: The turned-down sheet disclosed the face of a girl who looked fully the age she was reported to be—fourteen. She was lying at a distance of about four yards from the window, and with her back to it; but, before I gave any particular attention to her, I had put back the window curtains, and there was light enough. She has dark brown hair, thick and strong looking. The girl's face is by no means cadaverous. There is flesh on the cheeks, which gave a pinkish tint, and there is some color in the thin lips. The eyes are calmly closed as though in healthy sleep. I ventured to raise one of the lids and to touch the eye beneath—to pass the tip of my finger across it, in fact—but there was not even a quivering of the eye-lash.

Her position in the bed is a natural one. She lies on her left side, and her cheek rests on her open hand. "She was always used to lie like that before she was afflicted," the mother informed me; and whenever she was obliged to leave the child by herself she placed her hand so because she appeared to be much more comfortable. I took hold of the girl's disengaged hand and found that it was quite warm and moist, and found that the finger nails were neatly trimmed, the fingers were not in the least stiffened, and may be closed on the hand as nicely as those of a sleeping person. It is not a skeleton hand, neither are any of the little girl's limbs so emaciated as, under the extraordinary circumstances alleged, might be expected. I measured the forepart of the arm by spanning it. I could barely make my thumb and middle finger meet. This would give eight-and-a-half inches as the circumference of the arm.

The child's body is very thin as compared with her limbs, but I have seen children in hospitals who have ultimately overcome their disease, much thinner. There is not much substance in her flesh, however; it is soft and flabby, or, as her mother expressed it, "slummy." I placed my hands on her feet, and was startled to find them almost ice-cold. They were always cold, the mother said; so much so that she found it necessary to keep a hot-water bottle always ready to use in case other means—such as friction—failed to bring warmth into them. As regards the child's breathing it is so feeble that it is almost impossible to detect it; you cannot feel it by holding the cheek to her mouth, and only the faintest flutter is felt when the hand is laid over the region of the heart.

This is not the first instance of a trance in the Trilling family. The child's father laid three weeks, speechless and motionless before he died; and a brother of the father—I have only the woman's unsupported statement for this, be it borne in mind—lay six months and a week in the same condition before his demise. The mother of the entranced girl has married a second husband, a man named Sadler, an agricultural laborer earning twelve shillings a week. Mrs. Sadler has had twelve children, but there are only two at home beside the insensible girl, and they are boys of ten and fifteen years of age, able to earn something. Up to the age of eleven years the child, Ann Trilling, enjoyed perfect health; then, however, she was afflicted with abscesses in her neck. To get cured of these she was admitted into Reading Hospital, where, for seventeen weeks, she was treated.

Ultimately the hospital authorities, according to the mother's account, discharged her, on the ground that they could do no more than they had done. It was on Tuesday that the child came out of the hospital, and, there being no more convenient method of carrying her home, she was placed in what the mother describes as a "jolting old cart." As soon as she reached home the child, for the first time in her life, was seized with fits, began to grow drowsy, had fresh fits frequently, and recovering was drowsier still. This continued until the Thursday following the Tuesday on which she left Reading Hospital—the 29th of March, 1871, was the date—and on the evening of that day she roused herself, and began to talk to her mother about her pains, telling her she wished she could die and be at rest. The mother's narrative is, that she told the little girl to pray, and that they prayed together—the child rocking herself to and fro, with her hands clasped, gradually losing command over herself, and growing more and more convulsed, her eyes rolling wildly, and her limbs twitching.

The mother, alarmed at these symptoms, sent immediately to Dr. Hammond, at Stoke Church; but when he arrived, to use his own expression, "the child was fixed down." That is to say, she had sunk into a state of insensibility, in which she now remains. For several months her immediate condition was disturbed by fits of a kind similar to those which at first attacked her, and during her convulsions she would utter moaning sounds, as though in pain; but from the 29th of March, 1871, until the present time—twenty-two months—she has never once voluntarily moved from any position in which she had been laid, has never opened her eyes to look about her, nor uttered any word or sound, or made any sign that she was conscious of living.

The only conveyance between Aberystwith and Aberayron is a two-horse wagonette. First, second and third-class fares are booked in this primitive conveyance, and the following curious distinction is made between the passengers: First-class passengers are allowed to retain their seats throughout the journey; second-class have to get out and walk up the hills, which are both numerous and steep, after the fashion of the Welsh hills; third-class have not only to get out at the steep places, but have to assist in pushing the vehicle up them. This arrangement works very well, but the pace is not great.—Court Journal.

Largest Circulation in Northwestern Pennsylvania.

THE bill which passed the Senate a few weeks since to establish an Insane Asylum in one of the northwestern counties of this State, has also passed the House, and only awaits the Governor's signature to become a law.

THE New York Herald correspondent at the Modoc camp reports that the peace commission will probably be unable to satisfy the demands of the Indians, and a fight may be expected when the pow-wowing closes. General Canby had advanced his troops so that they occupy the lava beds and surround the stronghold of Captain Jack's band in such a manner as to place the Indians at a great disadvantage, should they fall short of provisions or ammunition.

THE American Grocer shows up two frauds this week that are worthy of mention. One is the soaking of dry peas that sell for $1 75 a bushel, putting them in cans to be retailed as "green peas." The other is in grading oysters from one to four ounces of meat in pound cans, with the price varying from seventy-five to ninety cents a can. The standard weight should be six ounces to the pound can, and such cans are held at $1 10. This shows clearly the extent of the fraud practiced on the unsuspecting public, who open their choice oysters only to find that they have been sold—for they are all retailed as standard oysters.

Two woman lawyers and twelve female doctors were included in the graduating class at the Michigan University this year, they having passed all of the examinations with credit and graduated with honor from this institution, which stands at the head of Western Colleges. The proposition to admit ladies to the University was bitterly opposed by the more conservative members of the faculty and Regents, but the public sentiment of the people forced the concession. The experiment has proven completely successful from the commencement, as it has in every other institution where a fair trial has been given to the young ladies. Michigan University ranks higher than any other institution of learning that admits ladies to all of its departments, and their success there will be gratifying to all who feel an interest in the advancement of women.

IF the power of the press can compel a reform in steamship management, the New York editors seem determined to keep the people thinking of the subject until the reforms shall be assured. Papers that were lenient at first have become bitter in their denunciation of Captain Williams and his incompetent petty officers and mutinous crew. The defects in construction of the Atlantic are dwelt upon, and the niggard meanness of penurious management which has been revealed is roundly condemned by the most conservative papers. The interest in the subject seems to be increasing, rather than diminishing, if we are to judge from the tone of the Eastern press and the number of communications from people which appear in the columns of all metropolitan journals. It is evident that the storm of indignation is too great for the White Star Line to attempt any defense at present.

PROFESSOR KENT, of Ann Arbor, in his address to the graduating class of the Michigan University Law School, did not attempt to palliate for the practice of our modern criminal lawyers, but after enumerating many of their characteristics declared that such men were enemies of society. He claimed that it was this particular class of lawyers that were bringing the profession into disrepute before the public, and that such men were real enemies of honest young lawyers who had marked out an honorable course in their profession. The Professor has spoken wisely. A species of law practices which is becoming too common has for its sole object the defeat of justice, while the theory is that lawyers are officers of courts, introduced for the purpose of assisting in the administration of justice. There is certainly a great deal of room for reform in this direction, and it is well that a University Professor should become a prominent reformer to assist in elevating the moral tone of the rising members of the bar.

NOTHING shows the great revolution that has taken place in France so plain as the emigration of Frenchmen since the fall of the Empire. We may flatter ourselves with the prospects of Republican Government in Europe, but the naked fact remains that the French people were more prosperous under the Napoleons than under any other governors for five hundred years, if we are to judge from the number of Frenchmen who left their native shores. Naturally, the love of country is prominently a characteristic of Frenchmen; they will never leave La Belle France as long as they can make a living, unless dissatisfied with the government. The exceptions to this rule are so few as to be of no real significance; it is therefore evident, when emigration becomes conspicuous in France, that the government is distasteful to a large proportion of the people. It is true that much of the emigration is from the surrendered provinces; but a large per centage is from portions of France that has not been especially scourged by the late war. This sentiment of discontent may prove to be temporary, it may be partially due to the unusual burdens of taxation, it may be owing to the rigid conscription laws, or to all of these causes combined. One thing is certain this uneasiness is manifest to a much greater extent than has been known in France since 1848. The enormous burden of taxation must be permanent, for the expenses of the government and interest upon the debt almost preclude the payment of any considerable portion of the principal for many years to come; this fact may have great weight with the more thoughtful emigrants who prefer to shun this burden by seeking a new home in a new country, where their capital can be made more readily available. Viewed in whatever light we will, the outlook is not particularly inviting for the stability of the Republic or happiness of the people, when so many thousands of Frenchmen are voluntarily leaving their native country.

THE free traders have been attempting to make capital out of the depressed condition of the woolen market and stagnation in the wool trade. A reporter of the New York Tribune was detailed last week to make inquiries among New York dealers, and Saturday published these gentlemen's reasons for the present unsatisfactory condition of the market. They nearly all agreed that the failures of manufacturers which have been reported, was due to speculative operations last year. Many mill owners bought enormous stocks of wool at high figures, the price of wool fell, the manufacturer then was compelled to sell his cloths at a loss, the heavy importations and unusual activity of American factories over-stocked the market with cloths, forcing down prices until they became ruinously low to those manufacturers who had been working up their heavy loads of wool. These reasons are substantial enough to satisfy any person of common sense, and as there can be no doubt whatever but the statements are correct, it is hard to see where the free-traders can find any comfort from the facts. But this class of writers do not seem to care much for facts. A few woolen mill companies have failed; to their mind the fact is due to the outrageous tariff, of course. Now that the matter has been explained, these overzealous writers will have an opportunity to correct the errors under which they have been laboring, if they are so inclined; but we fear they will be as backward as usual when they find that the tariff has had no effect whatever in crushing these struggling manufacturers who had made unfortunate investments in high-priced wool which they

THE ATLANTIC DISASTER.

Erroneous Statements.

HALIFAX, April 7.

In the investigation into the Atlantic disaster this morning, C. L. Brady, Third Officer, in his statement, said that there were absurd and incorrect statements. After telling the story of the position of the vessel, when it was decided to run for Halifax, he said he was in bed when the ship struck, it not being his watch. He rushed on deck, and being obliged to take to the rigging, worked his way forward and made communication with the rock, as previously related. Nothing was said or done to impede the passengers coming on deck; do not know the speed when the vessel struck; the Captain did all any many could to save life; could distinctly see and hear him from the rock, exerting himself. From my knowledge and experience of crews, that of the Atlantic was far better physically, and fully as well disciplined, as are the average. At the close of his examination, Mr. Brady stated on oath that the stories of robbing the dead are entirely true.

John Brown, Fourth Officer of the Atlantic, testified that the Captain, at 1 o'clock Monday directed him to alter the course to N. 24 E. for Halifax; were then running seven knots; coal was increased afterwards, and at 4 o'clock speed was eleven knots; at midnight the Third Officer told me the distance to Sambro Light was 48 miles; the ship having run 122 miles since noon; the ship was running nine knots at midnight; at 1:30, wind was W.N.W., with a little swell; the leads were all on the bridge ready for sounding; between 1:30 and the time the ship struck I was on the saloon deck, about ten feet below the bridge; I told the Captain's boy not to call him till 3 o'clock, and the Second Officer told him he would call the Captain; the Second Mate was on the bridge; the night was cloudy; I left the deck and went to the weather side and looked for the light; could not see anything but the open sea; about half an hour after the ship struck; did not let the boy call the Captain, because I knew the ship had not run anything like 48 miles; all of the officers knew we were running in to make shore; no one, in my hearing, told the Second Officer that the distance had been run; one of the Quartermasters asked me if he should go to the main guard to look for land; told him it was too soon; I did not hear the roar of the sea on shore; probably because of the noise of the engines; we must have had a good mile from Pennant Point when we run in, but I neither saw the breakers or saw the rock; I was in the steerage at the time; had not looked at the chart; did not know the coast; to my certain knowledge, nothing was done to prevent the passengers from coming on deck; the Captain did everything he could to save life; none of the officers spoke of heaving the leads or stopping the ship; leads were not hove on account of the clearness of the light and the certainty of seeing the light; don't think the vessel, after she struck, was aground astern; went below at a quarter to 3 to inspect the steerage; returned when that duty was performed; the door between the wheelhouse and the chart room was open at 2 o'clock; the Captain was within six feet of the man at the wheel; the crew worked well; the Captain and other officers were attentive, efficient and all temperate men; no cards or other games were allowed; it is not true that the Captain was playing cards half an hour before the ship struck.

William Hogan, a steerage passenger, testified that he went to bed at 9 o'clock on the night of the disaster and remained till 2:30; then went to the upper deck for a while; walked up and down near the engine room; heard the watch call out 3 o'clock, and then went below; before doing so, I walked out on the side afterwards found nearest to land; the sea was light; neither saw nor heard anything to indicate close proximity to land; almost immediately after I laid down the second time I heard a fearful crash the windows instantaneously opened; looked out through a port-hole and saw the rock; a companion and myself made our way to the second deck; don't know how we got up, as the concussion had knocked the companion-ladder away; some passengers cried out below, "the doors are closed;" but I think they had, in their hurry, missed the place where the doors were; I found it very hard to get out; I positively believe a great many more would have been saved had the means of exit been more ample; there is, I think, only room for one to get out at a time.

Joseph Carroll, able seaman, testified: Was on the lookout forward of the bridge; knew we were making for the land and the coast was dangerous; the ship was going ten knots eight or ten minutes before she struck; I saw the breakers first, and then land on the starboard bow; I sung out "Breakers ahead" to the officers on the bridge; I did not hear the breakers at all; I stood about thirty yards from the bridge; am sure my cry was heard by the Second Officer; don't think that even if the engines had been reversed the ship could have been prevented from striking.

Patrick Riley, able seaman, testified: Was on the lookout on the bridge with the Second Officer when I saw breakers; I called out, "Breakers or ice ahead;" one of the Quartermasters saw them at the same time, and told the Second Officer, who immediately gave the signal to give full power astern; he heard no noise of breakers; as near as I can judge the ship was within a quarter of a mile of the breakers when I first saw them.

An agent of the Associated Press had an interview to-day with Captain Williams on several points brought out in the investigation:

Reporter—How do you account for the extraordinary consumption of coal? The English managers say the Atlantic had a much larger quantity on board than she usually consumed.

Captain Williams—Probably that is true as to quantity, but half of it was English, which is inferior in quality, whereas we use Welsh coal. Had all the coal been Welsh, the quantity would have been sufficient to carry us to New York.

Reporter—What about the provisions?

Williams—We had an ample supply of all stores, except salt fish for Catholic passengers, who, on the Friday previous to the wreck had complained of the sea fish.

Quartermaster Thomas, in the course of his testimony, repeats the words he addressed to the Second Officer, and said the latter replied, that he was not Captain and I was not mate, and could not do as he pleased. Thomas then asked the Fourth Officer if he should go to the main yard and look for the land, and was answered it is of no use. The witness told the Fourth Officer that he did not feel the land until they struck upon it. The Captain was called at 3:12, but did not arouse at first. The witness told the Second Officer that he had better shake him and get him up. Just then Carroll called out "Ice ahead." Witness left the wheel and ran to the door; saw white foam and ice, and ran to the wheel to put the helm hard astarboard. He then ran to the telegraph connecting with the engine room, but at that instant she struck.

Chief Engineer Foxley testified: At noon of the 31st of March, there were 127 tons of coal on board the ship 480 miles from Sandy Hook and 170 miles from Halifax with barometer falling. All the officers agreed to propose to the Captain to put about for Halifax. Eight hundred and forty-seven tons of coal were put aboard at Liverpool, and 120 tons were remaining from the previous voyage, making a total of 967 tons. We used about 80 tons before starting on the voyage. The average daily consumption was 69 tons, a consumption greater than usual, because the coal was a mixture of English and Welsh. We consumed about the same quantity this time as on the last voyage. That voyage we had a much larger quantity, probably 1,200 or 1,300 tons. We were out thirteen days and had 129 tons when we reached New York. Previous to the last voyage we had all Welsh coal.

The Divers at Work.

The divers are at work to-day and report the vessel most awkwardly placed. Two of them went into No. 4 hatch. The passengers and cargo are so mixed that the bodies cannot be got at. Two girls were found lying on their beds in the lower after steerage. Holes will be blown in the ship to facilitate the recovery of the bodies and the cargo. Eleven bodies were got out to-day, of which five were grappled up to-night. Two hundred and twenty-six have been recovered, but none of those found recently were cabin passengers. The reports in the press respecting a light at Cape Prospect being mistaken for that of Sambro are false. There is no such light as Cape Prospect. Nobody on board the Atlantic saw any light in approaching the coast.

CONNECTICUT.

Election.

HARTFORD, April 5.

The election to-day was quiet and a light vote was polled. Traveling is bad, and it is the general opinion there will be no election for Governor by the people. The Prohibition ticket tending to prevent either the leading candidates getting a majority. The Legislature will probably be Republican. General Hawley will be elected to Congress from this district by a larger majority than last fall. Starkweather will be re-elected in the Third district, and the chances favor Kellogg in the Second, though that district will

The agents of the steamship Thorwalden, have received a cable dispatch which says she was wrecked in a sound of the Swedish coast on the night of April 5th. The passengers and crew are safe. The vessel and cargo will be a total loss, but are fully insured.

Mutual Life Insurance Company Investigation.

Up to the recess to-day the only new point adduced in the Mutual Life Insurance Company investigation, was that the Policy Commissioner, Mannerie, had obtained $6,000, the said money having been used at Washington to relieve the company from taxation, and charged to the account of legal expenses.

MacDonnell.

MacDonnell, the alleged principal in the forgeries on the Bank of England, was brought before Judge Woodruff to-day, on a writ of habeas corpus, but at the request of counsel for the British Government the case was postponed till to-morrow.

Swindler Arrested.

Eugene N. Pinckey, who keeps a banking and exchange office in the basement of 68 Wall street, was to-day arrested and lodged in the Ludlow street jail on a charge of swindling a German emigrant, John C. Korsenderver, out of $300.

The Strike of Gasmen.

There is a full supply of gas in the downtown districts to-night. The strikers say they will hold out. No disturbance is reported to-day, and all went to work except those discharged by the New Nork Company. A committee of workmen now employed by the Manhattan Company, waited on the leader of the strikers of the New York Company to-day, to make arrangements to strike off the former.

Robert Bleakley.

Counsel for Robert Bleakley, charged with the murder of Maud Merrill, to-day applied for a delay in order to obtain proof of the prisoner's insanity. Decision reserved.

Sued for Libel.

Miss Laura Keene, the well-known actress has brought suit against C. M. Brotsford, of the American Literary Bureau, to recover $15,000 damages for alleged libel.

The Erie Investigation.

At the Legislative inquiry into the Erie railroad affairs to-day, a letter was read from John Williamson and F. S. Grammer, ex-clerks, promising to show, if the books were produced, that the company's statement of freight and passenger earnings was grossly exaggerated. After reading the letter, the clerks were called and testified that while they could not point out specific inaccuracies in the absence of the books, they were satisfied that the returns of the agents were cooked; that a dividend might be declared, as the earnings of the road in 1872 were not as large as in 1871.

Mr. Beach, the counsel for O'Doherty, stated that his client was now perfectly satisfied the accounts of the company have not been falsified, and that the present management was honest and reliable, and Oliver W. Cook and Colonel Duran, Auditors of the Erie Company, testified that the statement of net earnings on which a dividend was declared were from actual and correct returns.

WASHINGTON.

Sudden Death.

Appointments.

There will be some appointments made of Deputy Collectors in some of the late Internal Revenue districts, which will be selected from among the assistant assessors.

A dispatch from Laredo, dated April 1st, says the United States Frontier Commission were at New Laredo. The Mexican Commission had held a joint session with the American Commission on the subject of the disturbances.

Weather Report.

WASHINGTON, April 7.

For the South Atlantic States, falling barometer and southerly winds. Cloudy weather for the Middle and Eastern States. Falling bromometer, easterly winds, cloudy weather and possibly rain, except in Virginia and Maryland, where partly cloudy weather without rain is more probable. For the lower lakes, falling temperature, northwest and northeast winds, with cloudy weather. For the Ohio Valley and Illinois, falling barometer, northeast winds clouds and rain. A fire occurred at Murfreesboro, at 3 o'clock this morning, commencing in Cook's family grocery, east side of the public square, and from there spread to Reed's hardware store. Mrs. Corgall's millinery and several other stores were burnt. Loss about $20,000.

ARKANSAS.

Arkansas Legislature.

LITTLE ROCK, April 7.

The Senate to-day passed the bill creating the office of Circuit Clerk in counties containing 1,000 inhabitants.

The House passed the bill creating three new counties, Faulkner, Howard and Stone. The majority of the Committee on Federal Relations of the House, all Democrats, reported favorably to a memorial to Congress, asking that the benefit of the bankrupt law be extended to Arkansas.

MISSOURI.

Serious Accident.

ST. LOUIS, April 7.

During the very heavy rain storm last night a street railroad car was struck and thrown from the track at the crossing of the Missouri Pacific road and Seventh street, by a freight train on the latter road, which was being backed up. The car was broken up, two or three passengers badly bruised and the driver, who was thrown under the car, had several fingers cut off and both legs fractured.

TEXAS.

Fatal Affray.

GALVESTON, April 7.

Last night at 10 o'clock, a man calling himself James Helm, drew a knife and cut another man whose name is unknown and in his attempt to escape attacked and cut three unoffending parties who appeared to be in his way. Officer Ferguson in attempting to make the arrest was next to receive the knife, and died five minutes afterwards. W. Bennison, an old and respected citizen, who was one of the unfortunates, has since died, and it is thought two others will die. Henry Myers, a driver for Engine Company No. 2, it is believed will also die. The firemen swear vengeance against Helm. Intense excitement prevails and it is believed he will not be allowed by the mob to have a trial. Some of the police force have already asserted their intention to resign if called upon to defend the jail. His name is James Bennett Helm, of Floyd county, Virginia, and a cousin to the notorious Jack Helm, of Texas.

NOTICE is hereby given to all persons not to purchase a note given by me to E. Newkirk, dated the 8th of March, 1873, calling for one hundred and thirty-five ($135 00) dollars, payable one year from date. Money and Stock Market.

NEW YORK, April 7.

Money stringent. The reported action of the State authorities to enforce the provisions of the usury law is being met defiantly by lenders who threaten withholding from the market the money which for the last week commanded on a low average about 2 per cent for use. Early in the day loans were made at 1-16 per cent; but later the rates were 3-16 to ¼ per cent until long after 3 o'clock. It is reported that $3,000,000 in legal tenders have been sent to Philadelphia to get them out of New York banks. Money is still coming in from the interior in large sums.

The combination in gold appears to have control of the market, and showed their hand to-day by letting out a little, breaking down the price ⅜ per cent, and then moving it up again, or holding it steady at their option. The opening price was 119⅜, from which there was a fall to 118½; rising to 118⅞; falling to 118½; closing at 118⅝.

Gold loans were flat to 1-32 for carrying.

Clearings $102,000,000.

The Treasury disbursements to-day were $41,000.

Customs receipts, $325,000.

Sterling dull and heavy at 107@107½ for 60 days and 108½@108⅝ for sight.

Governments firm and ¼@⅜c higher. German bankers bought $800,000 for shipment; one firm alone has exported $12,000,000 since the 1st of January.

State bonds very dull.

The Stock market was firm early in the day, without material advance, but a general decline followed the putting up of rates for money, and with the exception of Harlem and Panama fell in prices ¼ to ⅞ per cent. Harlem declined from 126 to 124½, recovered to 126¾, and sold at 125@126, in the late dealings. Panama rose from 109⅝ to 109¾, fell to 103⅝, recovering to 109¾. The new Board of Directors chosen to-day are as follows: S. L. M. Barlow, Edward S. Pierrepont, T. B. Musgrove, A. B. Stockwell, J. M. Burke, G. G. Haven, C. A. Hotchkiss, Alexander Masterson, S. J. Harriot, H. W. Gray, L. S. Stockwell, C. A. Avery, and F. W. G. Bellows. Pacific Mail sold at 57¾@57¾@56¾, and Western Union Telegraph at 84¾@84¼. Erie rose from 64@64¾, but closed at 63¾. The remainder of the list was quiet the change being only ¼@⅜ per cent.

Dry Goods Market.

NEW YORK, April 7.

The commission houses were more quiet, but there was a fair jobbing movement in domestic cottons at unchanged prices. Low grades of brown and bleached shirtings continue irregular, but the best makes are firm in price. Denims, ticks and corset jeans are active and firm. Cottonades are in better request. Everett plaid and plaids are jobbing at 16½c. The Daily Bulletin says woolens show no improvement and are dull. Plain foreign dress fabrics of new shades are in good demand, but all other imported goods are quiet. Shawls inactive.

Produce and Provision Market.

REPORTED FOR THE MORNING HERALD FOR THE WEEK ENDING APRIL 2, 1873.

Business is very dull indeed. Merchants are now employing their time in collecting outstanding debts as their drafts came in fast and thick from abroad. Some of the grocers of this city have adopted the cash system, and from April 1st will sell no goods on credit, and it is expected by the 1st of May no grocer will sell goods on credit. Their losses during the past year have been enormous. Flour still rules high. Sugar and coffees are lower. Meats, lard &c., are advancing.

SPICES—Lower.

Canned goods for this season of year are unusually high, and the tendency is for still higher prices on account of the great demand.
